

I thought, what if aliens run into this crew - they're going to think those are the only people on Earth. I thought it was unreasonable not to have everyone represented.

Just because there's no-one else doing something, doesn't mean you can't be the absolute first one.

I looked down at Chicago and thought about the little girl who assumed she would go into space. What would my younger self have thought if she had met me? I think she would have been tickled.

Mae Jemison Quotes

I'd love to go into space again if there were a mission to Mars. I'd also love to go to a completely different planetary system, out of our solar system.

The really wonderful thing that happened to me when I was in space was this feeling of belonging to the entire universe.

I was really irritated that there were no women astronauts and there were no people of colour.

I was in the rocket waiting to lift off and I felt excited.

I could hear the noise of the engines and I could see the crowds waiting to wave us off.

I looked down and I could see the twinkling lights of my home city.

We soared through the atmosphere and I could see a meteor shower through the window. It was amazing!

I felt so lucky to have my dreams come true.

Your task:

Friday

Use your ideas from the grid to write sentences about your journey into space. Think back to the work we have already done, when we looked up and looked down.

Success Criteria:

- Write in first person based on experiences
- Write in past tense
- Write events in order
- Punctuate sentences with a capital letter and full stop
